Harry Styles fans are back at it again with another conspiracy theory, and this one involves TikTok and an anonymous Otamatone.

On June 30, TikTok user @terrytome posted a video of a gloved hand holding an Otamatone, an electronic musical synthesizer, playing an instrumental version of Harry Styles' 'Falling.'

The account has been using hashtags that are relevant to the former One Direction member, which made sure that Terry's videos began to appear on fan's "For You" pages, where TikTok curates contents for users.

Fans of Styles were quick to share their assumptions that @terrytome could be connected to Styles, leaving comments such as, "Alexa, what kinda laptop does Harry have?" and "Me tryna look in the screen to see if it's secretly Harry: 🙄🙄🙄."

The TikTok account has been updated at least every three days since the initial June upload and all of Terry's videos have been Otamatone covers of Harry Styles hits.

One comment from Terry stated that they wear gloves in their videos as they have very recognizable hands, which could either hint at the fact that fans are in fact right and this is Harry Styles secret TikTok account, or that @terrytome is just trolling everyone.

Fans really got riled up when Terry did a cover of an unreleased track by Styles titled 'Medicine,' which has been performed live a few times, but a studio version has yet to be released.

Of course, most musicians as talented as Terry would be able to do a cover of 'Medicine' based solely on a recording of the song being played live, but the fact Terry seemed to have a studio version of the song caused the fans to speculate.

One fan acknowledged this by commenting, "Wait you have a studio version of the instrumental," causing Terry to reply "🙄 I- no. No I don't. 🙄."

The now-personified musical instrument has garnered quite a following over the half a month they've been active on TikTok.

Fans have created fan art of Terry and leave comments on all his videos praising his work.
